VERIZON VIRGINIA INC.'S RESPONSE TO COX'S "REPLY"

In the “Reply of Cox Virginia Telcom, Inc.” (Cox “reply”), Cox improperly weighs in on a motion it did not file<sup>1</sup> and, in doing so, misconstrued Verizon VA’s Opposition to WorldCom’s Motion to Strike. Accordingly, Verizon VA seeks leave to file this brief response to the Cox “reply.”

Cox incorrectly claims that Verizon VA argues that the Commission “should not adopt contract language in the order in this proceeding.” Verizon VA anticipates that the Commission may specify which of the parties’ proposed contract language is consistent with its resolution of the open issues or the Commission may “adopt results not submitted by either party.” January 19, 2001 Order ¶ 4. If the Commission adopts results not submitted by either party, the Commission may order contract language or the Commission may rule on the open issue, leaving the parties to implement the order in the form of contract language. Regardless of the extent to which the Commission orders specific contract language or simply rules on open issues, the parties will have to “implement” that order by submitting an interconnection agreement consistent with that order. Verizon VA reviewed this decision-making process set forth in the Act and the Commission’s Orders to support its argument that striking Verizon VA’s proposed contract language would be inconsistent with that decision-making process -- not to suggest that the Commission should not adopt any contract language at all. See Verizon's Opposition to Motion to Strike of WorldCom, Inc. at pages 6-8.

Again, Cox goes too far when it suggests that Verizon VA’s “theory” is “that the submitted contractual language is unimportant.” Cox “reply” at 3. In fact, Verizon VA described the “the parties’ proposed contract language associated with an open issue [as] a primary and important tool for resolving open issues.” However, Verizon VA explained why “the parties’ proposed contract language generally, and the JDPL specifically, do not have the preclusive effect WorldCom attempts to give them under the Commission’s procedural orders applicable to this arbitration. See e.g., January 19, 2001 Order ¶¶ 4-6 (giving the arbitrator discretion to (i) require the parties to submit new final offers, or (ii) adopt a result not submitted by any party).” Moreover, Verizon VA pointed out the myopic view of both WorldCom and Cox in suggesting all record evidence be ignored in favor of a demonstrative exhibit -- the JDPL. Verizon VA has not suggested that the parties’ proposed contract language, wherever contained, be ignored, but rather considered in the context of all the record evidence. This is a far cry from attempting to “disavow” contract language as Cox claims.

<sup>1</sup> It also is curious that WorldCom’s December 21 Reply was able to cite to and “adopt” the Cox “reply” which had not yet been filed or served.

Contrary to Cox’s improper pleading and mischaracterizations therein, Verizon VA merely seeks full consideration of the record evidence and an arbitration order consistent with the Act and the Commission’s orders.

Respectfully submitted,
